Main Idea

1 Describe your invention, stating the problem solved (if appropriate), and indicating the advantages of using the invention

Caller IDs are in wide use today. When you receive a call while you are talking to someone else a click is heard in the telephone headset to notify you that another call is waiting for you. You can then choose to ignore the call or hit the flash button on your phone to put your current call on hold while you answer the other call. The problem with this arrangement is that there is no way to differentiate between important and unimportant calls. All calls create the same click in the headset.

A better idea would be to provision the call waiting service to give different signals for specified events. For example the signal would be unique for calls from specific telephone numbers, such as family members. There could also be special signals for long distance calls. The provisioning could also be dynamic. For example, when I am on a business trip and call home, I could cause the call waiting service to signal that the call is from me. This way my children will know that they better pick up the call when they are talking to their friends.

2. How does the invention solve the problem or achieve an advantage (a description of "the invention", including figures inline as appropriate)?

This invention is a service written on top of the TelcoSphere product. I would subscribe to the service and it would be provided to me via the local telephone network. Via the web I would be able to set the style of call waiting signal I desire for different events. Events would be, for example, an incoming call from a specified telephone number, an incoming call that is long distance, or a call that has instructed the TelcoSphere server via a special phone number and password, that for this call the signal is to be special.

3. If the same advantage or problem has been identified by others (inside/outside IBM), how have those others solved it and does your solution differ and why is it better?

This service does not exist today. This service would be of great interest to Telcos.

4. If the invention is implemented in a product or prototype, include technical details, purpose, disclosure details to others and the date of that implementation.

Yes, the TelcoSphere product.
